

What participants said:

"The program helped me a lot; it opened new professional opportunities for me."

"I liked everything - your positive energy, your behavior towards us. It improved my mental state, which I didn't have at all, because when you feel like this, you can do anything."

"I liked learning about programs that will help us when we are released."

"I liked the communication, respect, and honesty."

"In these few days, I realized that if you want to, you can learn."

"I learned how to communicate with other people."

"I learned things that will be useful to me, and I also liked that there was respect."

"I liked that we worked as a team."

"I really liked the way the program was presented by the trainers and the support they provided."

"The program should continue for more participants."

Social Farming 360° was a two-year program that began in January 2024 and was completed in December 2025. It played a pivotal role in transforming agricultural activity within correctional facilities by providing inmates with practical skills and actively supporting their social reintegration. At the same time, it ensured food security both within the correctional facilities and in the surrounding communities.
